ALUMNUS - MSC DIGITAL EDUCATION

Since starting the programme, Michael has worked in a range of different higher education roles in the UK and Netherlands, and now manages learning technologies at Royal Holloway, University of London.

“ I have worked in learning design, educational innovation and learning technology roles [...] and the programme has been invaluable at providing inspiration and theoretical insights relevant to my day-to-day work in each of these areas. ”

“ There is such a great array of different themes covered through the diverse range of courses. [...] Each of the courses I took had a distinct approach. ”

“ There was also plenty of room for creativity [...]. One such example was [the] course Education and Digital Culture where I was able to explore complex ideas and theories through my ‘lifestream blog’. This particularly appealed to my interest in multimodality. ”
